

MIDNIGHT SUPPER CLUB

A Multi-platform Food Competition Series
by Limehouse Entertainment

The clock strikes twelve. The butcher block offers up what's left of the garage-cured brie, hand-stuffed suckling pig, and the many empty bottles of home brewed wine. But the seven world-class Chicago chefs responsible aren't here patting each other's backs. They're locked in an impassioned debate over which is most rare: solfino beans from Central Italy or Ukraine's black tomatoes?

The answer is crucial. Because by sunrise, two of these culinary masters will be boarding an international flight to go find the dang thing.

Midnight Supper Club is an unscripted food and travel series that follows some of the world's top chefs as they hunt down the world's most rare heirloom, heritage, and regional foods—and then learn how the locals use it, get it back home, and incorporate it into their own style of cooking, while still honoring the ingredient's origins.

The catch? Both chefs must present their culinary creations at the following week's Midnight Supper Club (MSC) session, to be judged by the very same passionate, hypercritical peers that send 'em packing in the first place.

And this group knows food. The MSC table is open only to the best of the best—from recognizable, even famous icons to the brash, young newcomers nipping at their heels. These are the mad men and punk rock chicks responsible for thrusting Chicago's reinvigorated food scene back into the culinary spotlight.

Every week, these top chefs arrive at the MSC table with their bags packed and no idea where they'll be going, if they'll even be going. But one thing is for sure: two of them are going somewhere.

Will it be Arizona for l'itoi onions, or Morocco for heirloom couscous? Iroquois white corn in Southern Illinois, or black densuke watermelon in Japan?

Debate decides the elusive foodstuff. A coin toss, the two (un)lucky participants. And some of the food world's sharpest palates gathered around a butcher-block table will crown one winner of the most coveted prize of all:

Bragging rights among friends... at the Midnight Supper Club.
